Fed Taper and Commodities with Don Coxe - March 6

By Catherine Austin Fitts

This week on The Solari Report, I will be speaking with Don Coxe of Coxe Advisors about the commodities market, including what the impact of the Fed's taper of its Quantitative Easing program might be.

Coxe Advisors serves as advisor to a series of commodities funds in the United States, Canada and internationally. Coxe's conference call briefings have become so popular through word of mouth that he is now launching a subscription service.

I started listening and following Don's work years ago. Don understands commodities and markets from the boots on the ground of a farmer, a miner or an operator as well as from the point of view of hot money shifting billions of dollars and currency between fixed income, equities and commodities around the globe. His breadth of knowledge is remarkable – it's the reason he is often referred to as "a Renaissance man."

Highlights from Last Week's Report

"I want to look at how the system operates, how the breakaway economy is really working and operating, and do it in a fairly dispassionate way. Let's start with the people who are governing the economy, if you will. If I could underscore anything about them, it is the extent to which their position appears to be insecure. You have no group that has complete lockdown control of the planet. You have different factions, and they compete."
