Breakaway Economy Pt. 2

By Catherine Austin Fitts

This week's Solari Report is a follow up to your questions on our January Annual Wrap Up. It is a briefing on the parts of the global economy experiencing significant investment, including from funds shifted out of governmental systems over the last twenty years and technology transferred from black budget programs.

In the first part, I briefed you on WHO is running things and what their concerns are.

This week, in the second part, I will address WHAT is happening – what we are building, growing and doing. What are the industries, technologies and regions that are experiencing the reinvestment of trillions shifted out of existing systems? What are some of the important issues raised as a result that will impact our lives and our personal finances?

In Money & Markets this week I will discuss the latest market and geopolitical developments, so please post your questions on the blog!

Highlights from Last Week's Report

"We want to talk today about both the Fed taper and commodities, but one of the things I think you covered very well in your new strategy journal is what the consequences of the Fed policies and quantitative easing is on the economy and what some of the risks are. Maybe we could start there and talk about what the extraordinary injection of Fed intervention is doing in the markets, what it's doing to investors and what you think it means to the commodities market."
