Managing End-of-Life with Jo Kline Cebuhar

To

One of the most remarkable aspects of my life so far is the number of times that I have faced death – call them “almost near death experiences.” A healer once told me that there were more than a few people who found it baffling, even terrifying, that I was alive and well.

One of the blessings of such circumstances is that I have made friends with death. In a favorite movie, the hero says “Death smiles at us all. All a man can do is smile back.” Indeed if you can smile at death, including your own, you free yourself from a world of worries, many instilled in our culture for the sole purpose of creating dependency and selling commercial and financial products. You step into a more meaningful and lively life.

This week on The Solari Report, I will speak with author and attorney Jo Kline Cebuhar about her new novel Exit that tells the story of life and death in a hospice in Iowa. Jo will share her recommendations for building our skill sets at managing the end-of-life, whether our own or of those we love. We will also touch base on her remarkable work on health care proxies [See our last Solari Report with Jo] and ethical wills.

Highlights from Last Week's Report

"I wanted to get Jon Rappoport and Joseph Farrell on the phone. We came out of San Mateo together wanting to continue the conversation. A lot of the subscribers who attended kept asking, 'How do I break away? How can I be happy in a world like this? How can I make sure that my children understand what is really going on and be successful?'"
