Soft Revolutions with Wayne Madsen - June 23rd

To

"Revolutionaries do not make revolutions. The revolutionaries are those who know when power is lying in the street and then they can pick it up." ~Hannah Arendt

This week on the Solari Report, Wayne Madsen of The Madsen Report joins me to discuss his new book Soros: Quantum of Chaos and "soft revolutions." With years of experience working for the U.S. military-intelligence establishment, Wayne walks us through the strategic application of global philanthropic funding to advance both US and private interests. We discuss the application of "soft" power – continuing our discussion with Nafeez Ahmed on The CIA, NSA & Google and with Charles Hugh Smith on Soft Weapons.

Wayne reviews soft revolutions around the globe during the last decade — the Arab Spring, Ukraine, and Hong Kong — as well as the targeting of China and Russia, and domestic disturbances, including Ferguson, Missouri. He considers what we should expect in terms of the application of "soft power" by the next US administration.

In Let's Go to the Movies, I will review George Clooney and Julia Robert's latest: Money Monster. Clooney plays a "Kramer" character whose TV show is hijacked by a young man who has lost his life savings in a hedge fund manipulation. The story is a reminder that capitalism and organized crime differ significantly and that organized crime is, in fact, the primary contributor to inequality and falling productivity.

Highlights from Last Week - Detoxing From Toxic Vaccines with Dr. Laura Thompson

Publicity regarding the new documentary Vaxxed: From Coverup to Catastrophe has stirred the political cocktail created by heavy schedules of vaccines, vaccination mandates and the rising levels of autism in children, particularly boys. Among other things, Vaxxed tells the story of the CDC scientist Dr. William Thompson, who confessed that the CDC had omitted crucial data that revealed a causal relationship between the MMR vaccine and autism. We hear estimates that if current rates continue, by 2032, one out of every two children – 80% of them boys – in America could become autistic.

This is an issue that is of great concern. If one out of every 60 children in America today becomes autistic, potentially millions of children, and their families, and household financial security are being harmed or destroyed, both here and throughout the rest of the world. We need to reverse the rising trend, not let it continue.

Vaccination mandates are a subset of an astonishingly inhuman assault on health freedom. At some point one must ask, are we humans or livestock? US government health care policy appears to be driven by the notion that our bodies are government property and private commercial interests are free to dictate and experiment, as they like.

Several months ago my Solari Circle began a discussion about how to communicate with loved ones about the risks of vaccines, particularly heavy schedules of vaccines. We decided to review existing materials and to discuss different approaches to communicate with loved ones about this sensitive topic.

One question was how to help people who have been injured by a toxic vaccine. That is a great question. What do you do when you or someone you love has an adverse reaction to a vaccine? I invited Dr. Laura Thompson, founder of the Southern California Institute of Clinical Nutrition, to join me this week to address the question. As luck would have it, Laura has just seen a showing of Vaxxed, including a Q&A with the film makers and a participating mother, and gave us a review.
